

MORE TALES OF GAY PARIS LIFE

Stories Are Told in the Barnes-Shropshire Suit.

DEFENDANT RELATES HIS SIDE

HAS BEEN HOUNDED FOR "MORE MONEY," HE DECLARES.

THE "affaires d'amour et finances"—the mixture of romance with worldly cash—a dashing young vic and a pretty actress, in the fashion swirl of gay Paris, were aired in dramatic brilliancy in the federal court room yesterday during the trial of the Barnes-Shropshire suit, commenced the day before. Snatches from a drama of real life—the French capital, fraught with circumstances and incidents which have seldom been portrayed even by the vivid imaginations of French authors, were presented in the most panoramic manner. They were scenes of glittering brilliance, pleasure in Paris, disappointment, strained circumstances, and actual want in London, a struggle over debts, pawnshop deals and finally a re-enactment of the whole affair before a court of justice.

Mrs. Hattie Delore Barnes, the plaintiff in the suit, sat, pen and paper in hand, jotting down notes here and there, casting a glance of scorn upon the defendant now and again, and one of appeal to the jury often. The defendant, Clyde Shropshire, had with disdain and his voice rang with a harsh scorn that approached anger.

French Law Discussed.

The morning session of the court was converted into a school of French law as a result of the attempt of the defense to show that the obligations assumed by Mrs. Barnes were outlawed by the statutes of limitation of the French courts. In support of this a copy of the French Code Napoleon was presented, and a passage read stating that debts such as were alleged in the case at bar were outlawed in five years. Further, a passage was introduced showing that promissory notes not properly made, in accordance with the laws of France, were invalid. The defense claimed that all the notes set forth by Mrs. Barnes had been paid, but held that under the French code they were null and void. Attorney D. R. Richards was placed on the stand to translate the sections under consideration and testify as to their validity. They were allowed to be presented, but in view of an objection on the part of the prosecution, Judge Marshall ordered that the objection be argued this morning, and stated his intention of passing upon it at that time. The relevancy of these laws to the case will depend largely the outcome of the present suit.

Before the defense took up its case, the prosecution introduced several tickets and letters showing that Mrs. Barnes had pawned articles in London while there with Mr. Shropshire, the money from which she claims went into Mr. Shropshire's pockets. Among these articles were enumerated silk handkerchiefs, collar buttons, comb silk dresses, scent bottles, silver mounted cigarette case, and various articles of feminine paraphernalia.

Defense is Outlined.

Judge E. V. Higgins, in taking up the defense, said he proposed to show that Mr. Shropshire had simply taken Mrs. Barnes' money on deposit, her safe keeping, and that she had never intended to give it to him. He declared that she came to him in a business manner with money and placed it on deposit, her safe keeping, and that she had never intended to give it to him. He declared that she came to him in a business manner with money and placed it on deposit, her safe keeping, and that she had never intended to give it to him.

Prominent Rock Island railroad officials have conferred with a committee of business men with reference to the extension of the line from Fort Worth to Galveston, probably via Dallas.
